This is a story of a snake charmer, that charmed something more than a snake.

They charmed a pet demon.

Chapter 2 by SaintSayaka

I mean, Beelzebub was nice and all, but he wasn't exactly expecting the crown prince of hell to pop out of his wicker basket while sitting on a park bench in Central Park. One thing was for certain, though - the amount of tips he was receiving were increasing exponentially.

He hadn't thought to ask the newcomer any questions until later that night, when his lips were practically blue from playing and his chest was devoid of air. It followed him home, wordlessly, drifting through the night air like an apparition. He had summoned weirder. But most of them went home after a while. This one did not.

Chapter 3 by PantherProduction

Exasperated he turned around and stormed down the sidewalk towards his house. As he got to the door, the spirit followed right behind him.

"You can't come in my house, I don't want you here." He looked at the demon and waved his hand, "Go back to where you came from." The demon did not leave however, and followed him inside. Getting angry the man tried to push the demon back out the door, but he went right through it. "DAMNIT!"

"Yeah, please don't do that again. That tickled my essence." The demon looked pleadingly at the man. "Please don't make me leave. I like it here and i don't want to go back. Please??" The demon batted his eyelashes like a female trying to charm a male. "I'll be quiet, honest. You won't even know I'm here." Once again he batted his eyelashes. Grudgingly the man agreed,

"Fine, but you have to be quiet, and be a part of my act." He thought slyly about the act he would put on with the demon. "Do we have a deal?" The demon didn't hesitate, "YES, YES OF COURSE. THANK YOU." He then hugged the man. "You won't regret this." The man pushed the demon away.

"I sure hope not."
